

Dead struggle hero gets a house

By JABULANI LANGA
SIMPHIWE "Fori" Ntunja, was a strong ANC activist who died four years ago.

His family was left without a decent house.

Simphiwe's involvement in the ANC caused many problems for his family.

In the late 1980s, his home in Bhuboyi, Port Shepstone, was targeted by rivals and burnt down. Last week, the struggle hero's family hardships were wiped away when they were presented with a brand new home by MEC for Human Settlements, Ravi Pillay.

Gogo Alzina Ntunja (71), mother of Simphiwe Ntunja, told Daily Sun: "We feel happy that at last the government remembered us as political victims.

"In the late 1980s and 1990s, my home was burnt because my son was an ANC activist."

MEC Pillay said they are paying tribute to the Ntunja family.
